THEIR QUARREL BEGAN IN A SALOON,

Elevated Railroad Men and Others Who Knew the Dead Man Do Not Believe He Sought Death Under the Wheels.

In the darkened parlor of a well furnished flat at No. 2429 Eighth avenue stands a casket covered with a black pall. The casket contains the mangled remains of John Golden, the would-be murderer and probable suicide of Friday night's elevated railroad tragedy.

At No. 460 West Thirty-fourth street is another well furnished flat, the window shades of which are closely drawn and the door of which is barred to all callers. Behind those drawn shades and that closed door Mrs. Catharine Havnor, who was shot at three times by Golden, spent all of yesterday with her husband.

When Coroner Dobbs and Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon made a formal examination of the circumstances leading up to the tragedy on the One Hundred and Thirtyfifth street "L" station Friday night, they ordered that Mrs. Havnor, who had been detained at the Manhattan Hospital by the order of Sergeant McNamara, of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station, should be released from custody. The woman had objected to going to the hospital at first and had refused to give her name when Dr. Fuentes, of West One Hundred and Thirty-third street, and the ambulance surgeon had dressed her injuries. For these reasons she was arrested by Roundsman Meehan and sent in the custody of Officer Enright to the hospital. After her wounds had been again dressed at the hospital Mrs. Havnor calmed down, sent for her husband, had a talk with him and decided to remain over night. The husband, H. J. Havnor, proprietor of a barber shop under the Alpine apartment house, in West Thirty-third street, near Broadway, went to the hospital bright and early yesterday morning and

The woman was not badly murt. One bullet had ploughed through the fleshy part of her right thumb, the other, striking her nead above the right temple, furrowed beneath the scalp and stood outlined, like a pln, beneath her hair and against her skull over the right ear. It was easily extracted the was the impact of this bullet which and stunned Mrs. Havnor and caused her to fall to the platform of the station while Golden, dodgling between a train upbound and one bound downtown in his effort to escape, fell beneath the wheels of one logonoutive and was crushed to death.

As he hay in his coffin at his wife's home twesterday, the dead man's face, save a few bruleses and two slight cuts, bore no traces of the terrible manner of his death. The funeral will take place to-day, gider the anspices of the Independent Open of the lateral will take place to-day, a der the anspices of the Independent Open of the saliors by united States Circuit Court, has been asked to pass upon. fold which did service in the last three hangings in Westchester County. On it are marked the following records: I. V. B., February 16, 1872; A. C., May 11, 1882; T. H., April 18, 1884.

The first refers to the hanging of Isaac Van Wart Buckhout for the murder of his wife; the second to that of Angelo Cornetti, the Italian convict, who stabbed Daniel Cash, and the third to the execution of Theodore Hoffman, the Portchester young man who killed the peddler, Marks, near that village.

Fitzpatrick took offense at a remark Rosendahl made against Caudidate Bryan and whipped out a pocket knife and slashed Fitzpatrick over the palms of the hands. Policeman Randell, of the Oak Street Sta-tion, arrested the men.

Worry Drove Rim to Suicide. Fred Peters, captain of the lighter Pitt, was resterday found drowned under his boat at the foot of South Fourth street, Williamsburg. The body was recovered and taken to the station house. He had a wife and two children, all of whom were suffering from diphtheria, and it is supposed that worry over their illness caused him to trite him life.
